How to Find Scholarly Articles
Session Objectives

- Learn how to identify which databases to search and find appropriate scholarly, professional, peer-reviewed journal articles.
- Learn how to cite your sources using the American Psychological Association style manual.
- Learn how to locate journals in the Library.
Chesnutt Library Has Over 320,000 Book Titles, Over 2,600 Current Periodical Titles, Over 410 Electronic Journal Titles, Access to over 11,700 Full-Text Electronic Journal Titles through NC Live, and Over 320 Full-Text Article, Biographical, Statistical and Informational Databases.
Reference Department
1st Floor of Chesnutt Library

- Staffed by professional librarians (M.L.S.)
- Assistance with using reference materials, the online catalog, electronic databases, and basic Internet searching to find books, journal articles and relevant Web sites.
- Over fifty (50+) computers with Microsoft Office 2010 and Internet capabilities.

Summer Hours
Monday through Thursday 7:45 a.m. until 10:00 p.m.
Friday 7:45 a.m. until 6:00 p.m.
Saturday 8:00 a.m. until 5:00 p.m.
Sunday 2:00 p.m. until 11:00 p.m.
Your Library PIN Number Allows You to Access Article and Information Databases Off-Campus and Access Electronic Course Reserves.

Once You Have Created Your PIN: You Can Renew Books Online; Request Loans of Books and Articles Through ILLIAD; and Place Hold Requests on Books From UNC-P and UNC-W.
If this is your first time, create a PIN number using at least four letters or numbers. After you submit, the next screen will prompt you to enter the PIN twice more. When Correct, Your Name, Address, Phone Number and an Expiration Date (end of the semester) will display.

Use your University ID Number (Banner# or 83#).

If you receive an “Invalid PIN” message, you may or you have forgotten what it was. You can contact the Circulation Desk to delete it out or use the “Forgot your PIN” link and it will be emailed to you.
Your Library Record Will Show Your Current Status. A Copy of This and Your FSU ID or Driver’s License Will Allow You to Check Materials Out of the 16 Other UNC System Schools.

The End Date of the Current Semester:

Dalhousie University Libraries

Citations indicate the exact location for sources of information used in the text of the paper; the references (or list of works cited) describes, as a whole, the works from which the citations are taken. PLEASE NOTE: The examples on the following pages are based on the style recommended in the American Psychological Association Publication Manual (6th ed. 2010).

SAVE TIME: Use RefWorks to easily keep track of your references and quickly format them correctly for your bibliography. RefWorks is a personal bibliographic citation managing system that Dalhousie subscribes to. For more information, go to http://www.library.dal.ca/RefWorks/.

IMPORTANT: Dalhousie University defines plagiarism as “the presentation of the work of another author in such a way as to give one’s reader reason to think it to be one’s own. Plagiarism is a form of academic fraud.” Find out what plagiarism is and how to avoid it at http://plagiarism.dal.ca.

REFERENCES

Remember: APA requires double-spacing between ALL text lines – that includes references. Please note that, in an attempt to save space, this document has been formatted in single spacing.

<td>Abstract</td>
<td>Recent advances in the field of prevention have led to a deeper understanding of the causes of adolescent problem behavior and to the identification of efficacious strategies to prevent delinquency, drug use, and other antisocial conduct. This 2009 Aaron Rosen lecture to members of the Society for Social Work and Research traces the evolution of prevention approaches in the United States. A public health model of intervention based on the principles of risk and protection is introduced as an important development in the field of prevention science. Examples from two longitudinal studies are used to illustrate how advances in prevention have led to positive changes in the lives of vulnerable children and youth. Practice, policy, and research challenges necessary to increase the impact of prevention are discussed. (Journal abstract)</td>

<td>Abstract</td>
<td>This study explores the similarities and differences between those who choose to remain in public child welfare (stayers) and those who leave (leavers) in a sample of Title IV-E MSW graduates. Interview transcripts from a self-selected sample of 386 specially-trained, MSW-level child welfare workers were thematically coded to compare and contrast the motivations, perceptions and experiences of 304 stayers and 82 leavers over a 10-year data collection period. Results showed that dedication to children and families and social work values does not differ between stayers and leavers. Overall, respondents raised a central issue of disconnection between educational experiences and agency realities. While all participants acknowledged workload and stress as job challenges, stayers illustrated experiences that buffered job pressures, particularly encounters with supportive supervisors. Leavers tended not to experience these buffers, and expressed more difficulty in balancing their professional and personal lives. (Journal abstract)</td>

About the Journal

Visit our Social Work Jobs site at SocialWorkJobBank.com to find a job or post a job.
The Journal of Social Work Values and Ethics examines the ethical and values issues that impact and are interwoven with social work practice, research, and theory development. JSWVE addresses ethical and value issues that encompass the full range of social problems and issues that social workers encounter. The journal provides the necessary historical perspectives on the development of social work values and ethics, as well as present articles providing value and ethical dilemmas stemming from state-of-the-art developments.

Manuscripts submitted to the journal should be relevant to the mission of JSWVE. The Journal of Social Work Values and Ethics focuses on areas such as:

- Development of models for analyzing and resolving value and ethical conflicts.
- Discussion of ethical and value dilemmas related to the development of new technologies.
- Research studies on the influence of values and ethics in social work practice decision-making and in agency program development.
- Examples of good practice that clearly highlight ethical and value considerations.
- Theoretical articles that explain the origin, development and evolution of social work values and ethics.
- Reviews and analyzes scholarly and practice books, monographs, and articles written on the topic of social work values and ethics.

Abstract: Using semistructured interviews and participant observation, this two-year pilot study of male Mexican migrants in Freehold, New Jersey, explored how day laborers perceive their struggles to support families despite escalating anti-immigrant legislation at virtually all levels of government. In particular, the author looks at efforts by Mexican migrants to contest characterizations of them as "illegal," a term that has clear connotations of criminality, and to distance themselves from others who commit crimes. Migrants questioned the moral legitimacy of U.S. immigration laws, an indicator that vigorous legal efforts to thwart their arrival could prove fruitless. This finding is critical for social workers which must find ways to support this vulnerable population.

An estimated 9.3 million unauthorized migrants now work in the United States (Passel, Capps, & Fix, 2004), taking unskilled jobs at low wages and prompting some lawmakers to call for tougher law enforcement or for measures to restrict access to health care and humanitarian assistance (Hancock, 2007). In what follows, I present empirical evidence of efforts by unauthorized Mexican migrants in one suburban town to contest the characterization of their presence as “illegal” or “criminal,” negative labels that they believe are hindering their ability to support themselves and their families. Data here are from a two-year exploratory study of Mexican migration that explored several aspects of this issue, including the vicissitudes of day labor (Cleaveland, 2008; Cleaveland & Kelly, in press) and migrant narratives of resistance to counter maltreatment (Cleaveland, 2008). I present empirical documentation of efforts by Mexican migrants in Freehold, New Jersey, to contest negative characterizations of undocumented immigrants as “criminals” or “illegal” and to distance themselves from criminal behavior. These strategies have become critical given recent efforts by some local governments...

METHOD
Data were gathered in two periods of intensive fieldwork, the first in summer 2005 and the second in summer 2006. I entered the field by working alongside activists with Casa Freehold, a five-year-old Freehold organization that advocates for migrant rights. Each day, one or two members of Casa Freehold park at las vias to meet with migrants and assist with concerns such as finding jobs. They also provide coffee, distribute clothing, and teach English. I became part of the nucleus of Freehold activists who meet men at las vias to help translate for migrants and prospective employers.

Setting
Freehold Township is a 38-square-mile town that includes farms, residential neighborhoods, and shopping centers. At its center is the two-square-mile Borough of Freehold, which serves as the Monmouth County seat. The borough’s mayor and community leaders are white. Census data show that in 2000, 34 percent of the Borough of Freehold’s population was Latino—more than one-third of the residents there. Thus, Mexican migrants are conspicuous by virtue of racial difference. Some Freehold residents credit Latino laborers with helping revitalize the borough’s moribund business district, whereas others blame migrants for littering and loitering (Editorials, 2004).

Day laborers assemble daily on sidewalks, parking lots, and the gathering site at las vias. Men who want to find work with the support of Casa Freehold walk the quarter mile from the town’s center to las vias, where they each pay a dollar to have their name placed on a list. They are called for work in order, much as in a union hiring hall. Those who do not find a job move to the top of the list the following morning.

Sample
Though the terms “illegal immigrant” and simply “immigrant” are commonly used to describe people who have left Mexico to work in the United States, I refer to the men interviewed for this study as “migrants.” Immigrants leave one country to settle in another. These respondents planned to return to Mexico, though several stated they would prefer to remain here were it not for family commitments. Most stated they hoped to be in the United States from one to three years.

Respondents (N = 32) ranged in age from 15 to 56 years. Though Freehold’s Latino population includes Guatemalans, Hondurans, and Peruvians, the sample was limited to male Mexican day laborers because of their visibility and national media attention. Twenty had worked on farms prior to migration, cultivating crops on parcels rented from landowners. Four worked in such service industry jobs as seasonal tour guide. Others had engaged in unskilled labor. Most had stopped attending school by sixth grade to work.

Data Collection
I worked with another researcher gathering data during summer 2005 and summer 2006 (Cleavland & Kelly, in press). The first phase (summer 2005) was devoted to participant observation, which included working alongside activists and migrants. This approach reflects the ethnographic emphasis on “knowing with” participants rather than dictating knowledge (Reinharz, 1997; Tedlock, 2000). Observation from May to July 2005 included qualitative methods such as participant observation, interviews, and informal conversations. From September 2005 to May 2006, observation was paired with semi-structured interviews with 16 men. In 2006, I conducted 23 in-depth interviews with people who worked at las vias. In all, 66 interviews were conducted with men at las vias, including 19 individual interviews and 2 focus groups.

Interviews with men at las vias lasted 45 minutes to one hour. The interviews were conducted in English and Spanish, and were audio recorded. Most of the interviews with men at las vias were conducted during the summer of 2005, but some were conducted in 2006. Interviewing at las vias was challenging because of the chaotic nature of the site. Men were often uncomfortable and uncooperative, particularly those who had not worked at las vias before. Those who had worked at las vias for several years were often more cooperative and willing to talk.

During the second phase of data collection, which occurred in the summer of 2006, 23 of the original men were interviewed again. These interviews lasted 30 to 60 minutes and were audio recorded. The interviews were conducted in English and Spanish. Interviews were conducted at the men’s homes, workplaces, or other locations. The interviews were conducted in English and Spanish. Interviews were conducted at the men’s homes, workplaces, or other locations.
How to Find Journal Titles

- Check to see if the journal title is owned by Chesnutt Library by checking FSU's Online Library Catalog under Journal Title or the Journal Finder.

- Go to the Periodicals Department
  - 1st Floor for Current Periodicals with titles A-Z
  - 1st Floor for Bound Journals with titles A-B
